Invisible Disabilities

Like many of our intersecting identities, not all “disabilities” are ones that we can see. The Invisible Disabilities Association defines invisible disabilities as follows:

The term invisible disabilities refers to symptoms such as debilitating pain, fatigue, dizziness, cognitive dysfunctions, brain injuries, learning differences and mental health disorders, as well as hearing and vision impairments. These are not always obvious to the onlooker, but can sometimes or always limit daily activities, range from mild challenges to severe limitations and vary from person to person.

They go on to note that a person with visible impairments can also have invisible disabilities that affect the way they live in and experience the world, and that people with invisible disabilities are often judged as able because of the way they look. Ultimately, the IDA challenges us to “listen with our ears, instead of judging with our eyes”, and offers many resources about how we can do just that.
